Huge Market Now For Leisure-Time Items, Services

NEW YORK—The growth of the economy in recent years accompanied by a big rise in personal income levels has created a multi-billion dollar market for a wide variety of leisure-time products and services as well as expanding the demand for basic necessities.

An important factor in this development has been the increasing prevalence of paid vacations and holidays for the average worker in the factory as well as in the office. Along with this, the short work week has become standard in business and industry and in virtually all other lines of activity. As a result, more leisure without loss of income has become one of the distinguishing characteristics of American life and of our living standards, and it has become a significant force in expanding consumer expenditures and in economic activity in general.

This trend has brought obvious benefits to the people and to the nation in the physical and psychological values to the typical individual and family of more time and money for recreational activities. From the financial point of view, however, it has been a costly development and an added charge on production. It is now estimated that paid vacations and holidays alone cost industry an average of about $200 a year per worker.

Ever See a Sphygmomanometer

WASHINGTON—The history of two diagnostic medical instruments that everyone remembers from his earliest visits to the doctor's office—the stethoscope and the sphygmomanometer (blood-pressure instrument) form the nucleus of a new exhibit at the Smithsonian Institution. These instruments are part of a collection lent to the Institution by Philip Reichert, M.D., of New York City.

The romantic history and evolution of the stethoscope began in 1819, when the young French physician Rene Theophile Laennec announced his invention of this instrument. Since then the stethoscope has become not only the standard equipment of every medical practitioner but also one of the very symbols of the profession.

As early as 1733 Stephen Hales measured the blood pressure of a horse, but it was not until late in the 19th century that the clinical sphygmomanometer came into being. As the new exhibit shows, it was with Riva Rocci's invention of a constrictive cuff instrument in 1895 and von Reklinghausen's experiments in 1901 that the modern blood-pressure instrument was born. Subsequent developments have been merely refinements of these two innovations.

Basketball? Gauchos Play It on Horseback

WASHINGTON—For 65 years basketball has fascinated North Americans, but the organization of a "Pata" league in Argentina introduces a new twist. The Argentines play their basketball on horses.

Originated by the Indians and enthusiastically adopted by the hard-riding gauchos of the pampas, the game of pato has been called the roughest of them all.

Pato means duck in Spanish. The name is an apt one, for the original "ball" was a dead duck sewn into a leather bag. The duck's head was allowed to stick out and two other handles were attached.

Pato's object is to throw the duck into a basketlike net at each end of a polo-sized field about 230 yards long and 90 yards wide. The catch is that each player holding the ball must "offer" it at all times, holding the pato at arm's length so that opposing players can grasp it.

The dead duck has long since been replaced by an official ball with six leather handles.

Rising Traffic Toll Shown in Death Claims

NEW YORK—Motor vehicle fatalities in the first quarter of this year resulted in 11,000 life insurance death claims for an aggregate of $23,000,000, the Institute of Life Insurance reports.

This was 1,000 more claims and $3,000,000 more in benefit payments than in the corresponding three months of 1955 and represented the largest first quarter total on record.

If the rate of gain of the first quarter continues through 1956, this year's life insurance death claims from auto accidents may be expected to reach a record $100,000,000.

Thieving Rat Caught

ANCONA, Italy—Carlo Frontini had wished for some time to catch the rat that was stealing banknotes from his wine shop cash box.

Finally Carlo moved a refrigerator and found a hoard of 10,000 lire notes (worth $16 each) that had been used to line a rat's nest.

Poultry Disease Control Pays

Although you may bring your chicks out of an attack of coccidiosis without too many deaths, the disease can have a marked effect on egg production. Tests have shown that hens developed from chicks which had coccidiosis at 6 to 8 weeks of age, laid about 19 per cent fewer eggs than did the hens developed from disease-free chicks. This could amount to a loss of $1.00 to $1.50 per bird.

To prevent this disease, feed a coccidiostat in the mash from the first to the 10th or 12th week, then gradually taper off the treatment.

Bicarbazin, biburam, or sulphaquinoxaline are among the drugs most commonly used in Virginia to prevent coccidiosis. Medication, however, is not a substitute for a dry, comfortable house. Watch the ventilation and don't crowd the birds.

Newcastle disease, bronchitis, and pox can be prevented by a good vaccination program. Intranasal Newcastle vaccine can be put in the noastril or the eye at one day of age (the hatcheryman will often do this for you), or it can be put in the drinking water when the birds are from 4 to 10 days old. Satisfactory immunization is also being obtained by nebulization of the vaccine in the chick boxes and by atomizing or dusting it over the heads of chicks under the brooders or in the house.

Birds kept for layers or breeders hsould be vaccinated at least once again before they go into the laying house.

Bronchitis vaccine can be given in the drinking water with the Newcastle vaccine at 4 to 10 days of age, or can be given in the eye or noastril by itself or with the Newcastle vaccine when the birds are about one week old. This vaccination also should be repeated before the pullets go into the laying house.

Fowlpox vaccine is given by running a needle applicator dipped in the vaccine through the web of the wing into the birds are 8 to 12 weeks old, or at least a month before they go into the laying house.

Piperazine compounds are effective in removing large roundworms from poultry. Piperazine citrate given in the drinking water at the rate of 8 grams per gallon of water for 4 days seems to be effective. It is generally advisable to repeat the treatment in two weeks.

A day or so after each treatment for roundworms, clean out the litter in the house and put in fresh litter to prevent reinfection.

When the treatment is given the birds on the range, move them to a clean area 15 to 24 hours afterwards.

CORN SUPERIOR TO SORGHUM

Corn still seems superior to sorghum for silage, according to tests at VPI Agricultural Experiment Station.

Researchers there say that in spite of the fact that the test crops have been planted at the most advantageous time for sorghum and two or three weeks after normal corn planting, total dry weights of corn have been as high or higher than available sorghum varieties except under drouth conditions.

Feeding value of corn silage is definitely superior to sorghum silage. In tests made on varieties in Virginia, leaf content of corn has been slightly higher than of sorghum; stalk percentage has been much lower, and grain weights of corn have been much higher.

Since the grain is a concentrated feed, corn sialge is not only better quality, but corn actually makes more feed per acre that does sorghum.n

BLUEMOLD TREATMENT

Ferbam and zineb are still the best materials to use for control of bluemold on flue-cured tobacco.

Most plant beds are ready for control treatments — start when plants are the size of a dime and continue treatment until planting.

Failure to control bluemold may result in no plants, or plants of poorquality.

NEW BOOK IN COUNTY LIBRARY

Anne Boleyn, by Evelyn Anthony. It began in a rose garden at Hever Castle on a lovely day in 1562, the story of this love between a king and his subject, which was to change the course of history; and it ended in blood and tragedy. Henry VIII, with his handsome looks and dominating personality, found a fit match in the beautiful Anne Boleyn, whose courage, pride, and indomitable ambition won for her a crown and cost her life.

ANTI-AIRCRAFT missile, the Navy's "Terrier," is one of a family of defensive missiles, including the Army's "Nike," which could be put into action if the nation's warning system indicated the approach of attacking planes. Primary purpose of these missiles at such a time would be to protect the nation's 92 critical civil defense targets from as many attackers as possible. The "Terrier" is shown silhouetted against the booster blast of another missile during firing practice aboard the USS Mississippi. (U. S. Navy Photo)
